In the "Passing Shadow," to-day, Dreamland presents to its many patrons a real drama of life. It abounds in genuine human interest and will hold an audience's attention from beginning to end. The plot is novel and well worked out. In fact, such a story might happen to you, me or the next person. The comedy in the new program is furnished in "The New Marshal."

"The Parson's Prayer," one of the pictures to-day at the Bijou theatre, won much favorable comment last evening. Its point of interest is unusual. Perhaps the best comic operetta in local theatres this winter is "Buffoon," which is a silent story of a king's jester, who ran away with the royal daughter and turned out to be brighter than they thought. The song is popular.

Among the two thousand school children who stormed the White House in Washington yesterday, making such a commotion that women and their clothes torn and hats knocked away, and one was rescued just about to find, were probably the seniors of Spaulding high school, who went there and were present. President Taft expected to receive eight hundred school children, but nearly two thousand showed his hand. The Spaulding seniors were scheduled to leave Washington this morning and arrive in Barre to-morrow morning.

Possibly the most interesting moving picture on U. S. army life ever seen in Barre is now at the Comique. The title of the picture is "U. S. Army Maneuvres at Fort Leavenworth, Kan." Col. H. R. Loughborough, the commanding officer, assisted the Excelsior company in making the picture, and it is a fine one. During the action of film wall scaling, pontoon bridge building, erecting wireless stations, artillery practice, etc., are shown. Daniel Roach is singing, "Oh, What I Know About You" and is getting big applause, as usual.
